The heart of the road

Let's begin at the heart of the road, around the great desert.

Oasis towns and sites plotted at their real locations on a modern base map (Natural Earth). Rivers and coastlines are modern. Routes shifted over the centuries, so none are drawn as fixed lines.

AT A GLANCE

- At the centre of the routes lay the Taklamakan Desert
- It was ringed by the Tian Shan, the Pamirs and the Kunlun
- Caravans went around it, along northern and southern chains of oasis towns
- They met at Kashgar before the passes west

Places you'll visit in the episode

Ten places from the episode, from Chang'an to Samarkand.

Chang'an · The Han and Tang capital, near modern Xi'an, where Zhang Qian set out about 138 BCE.

The Jade Gate · Yumen, the western gate of the Han watchtower line near Dunhuang, built of rammed earth.

Mogao Caves · Cut into a cliff near Dunhuang from 366; 492 painted caves survive.

Turfan · An oasis below sea level, watered by underground karez channels, many still flowing.

Kucha · An oasis kingdom known for music, orchards and monasteries, home of Kumarajiva.

Khotan · The jade kingdom, its stone gathered from rivers coming down from the Kunlun.

Kashgar · Where the northern and southern routes around the desert meet before the passes west.

Issyk-Kul · The "warm lake" of the Tian Shan, which Xuanzang described and which rarely freezes.

Suyab · A trading city near Tokmok, later one of the Tang Four Garrisons, from 679.

Samarkand · Sogdian city, later Timur's capital, with the Registan and Ulugh Beg's observatory.

TWO THOUSAND YEARS, SLOWLY

A timeline of the road

Two thousand years along the road, one quiet step at a time.

AT A GLANCE

c. 138 BCE
Zhang Qian sets out

629–645
Xuanzang's journey

1900
The Library Cave

Silk itself is far older than the road: fabric from Yangshao-culture burials in China is more than 5,000 years old.

c. 4th–3rd c. BCE	A felt saddle cloth with a panel of Chinese silk is buried at Pazyryk, in the Altai mountains.
c. 138 BCE	Emperor Wu sends Zhang Qian west to seek the Yuezhi as allies.
c. 119 BCE	Zhang Qian's second mission goes to the Wusun; missions and trade follow.
c. 104–101 BCE	A Han campaign to Fergana brings back the "heavenly horses".
97 CE	Gan Ying reaches a "great sea" and turns back on the sailors' warnings.
166	Travellers claiming to come from Daqin, the Roman world, arrive by sea.
c. 313	Sogdian letters, among them Miwnay's, are lost in a mailbag west of Dunhuang.
366	The first cave at Mogao is begun, by tradition.
401	Kumarajiva is brought to Chang'an, where he translates Buddhist texts.

A timeline of the road

The story goes on from here, slowly.

629–645	Xuanzang travels to India by the Tian Shan and returns with 657 texts.
751	A Tang army is defeated at Talas; in 755 the An Lushan rebellion begins.
762	Al-Mansur founds Baghdad, the Round City, on the Tigris.
868	The Dunhuang Diamond Sutra is printed, the oldest dated printed book.
1253–1254	William of Rubruck reaches the court of Möngke near Karakorum.
1271–1295	Marco Polo's journey to the court of Kublai and back.
1325	Ibn Battuta sets out on some 24 years of travel.
1338–1339	Gravestones in the Chüy Valley record a sudden pestilence.
1370	Timur makes Samarkand his capital.
1420s	Ulugh Beg builds his observatory and star catalogue.

A timeline of the road

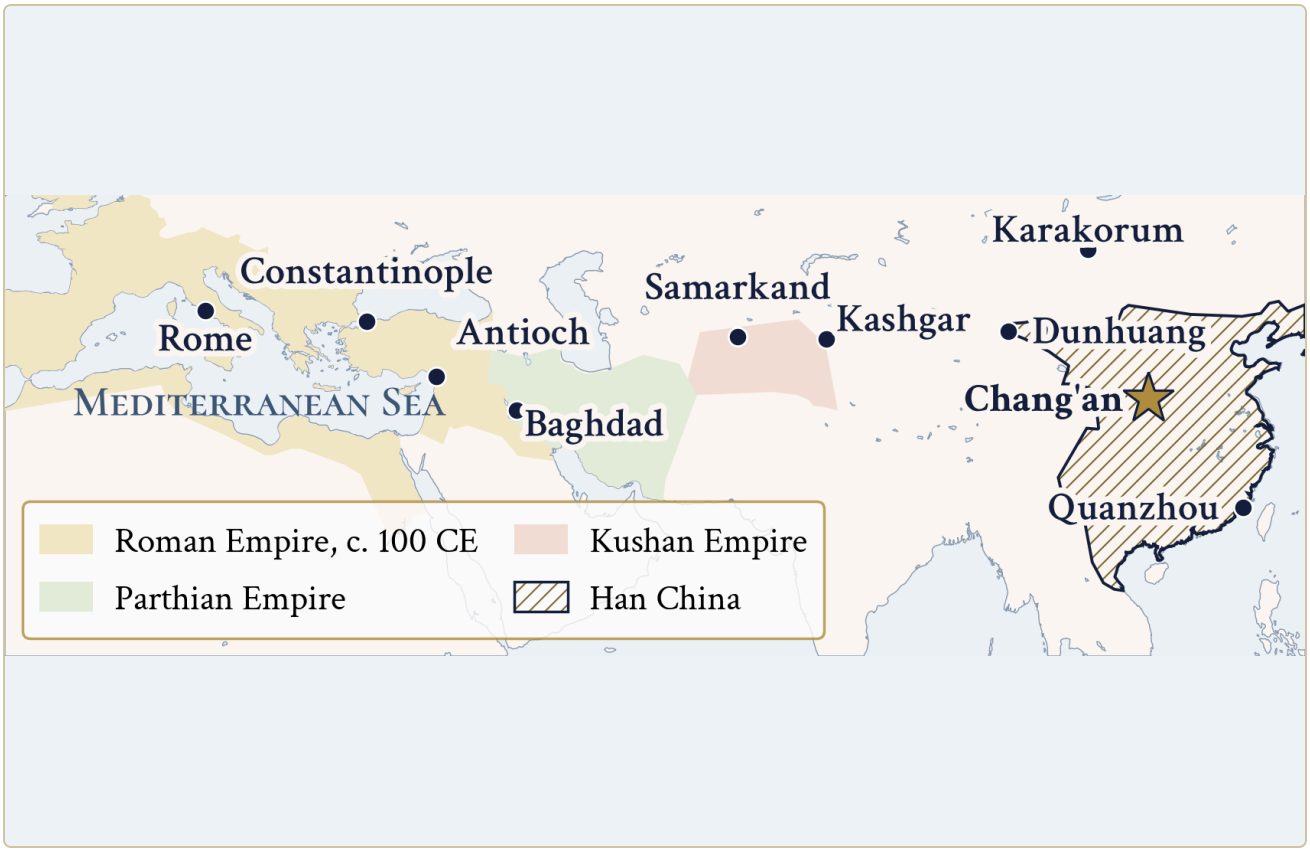

1405–1433 · 1498 — Zheng He's voyages; Vasco da Gama reaches India by sea.

1877 — Ferdinand von Richthofen popularises the name "Silk Road".

1900 — Wang Yuanlu finds the Library Cave at Mogao; Sven Hedin finds Loulan.

Four empires along one road

Now let's step back and see the four empires along one road.

Approximate extent of the four great powers around 100 CE, when goods could pass from Han China to the Roman world through Parthian and Kushan lands. Borders are simplified from the open historical-basemaps dataset and moved often. Later places from the episode (Baghdad, Karakorum, Quanzhou) are shown for reference.

People you'll meet

The envoys, monks, scholars and travellers you'll meet along the way.

Zhang Qian · Han envoy, held by the Xiongnu for about ten years, who reached Fergana and came home.

Gan Ying · Sent west in 97 CE by Ban Chao; he turned back at the "great sea".

Kanishka · Kushan king and great patron of Buddhism; his dates are debated.

Kumarajiva · Monk of Kucha who translated the Lotus and Diamond Sutras in Chang'an.

Xuanzang · Monk who crossed the Tian Shan in 629 and returned from India in 645.

WHILE YOU LISTEN

Things to spot, legend and history

A few things to listen for, and a note on legend and history.

THINGS TO SPOT IN THE EPISODE

- The “heavenly horses” of Fergana
- Miwnay’s letters, lost in a mailbag west of Dunhuang
- Xuanzang crossing the Tian Shan
- The Dunhuang Diamond Sutra of 868
- Ulugh Beg’s observatory in Samarkand

LEGEND OR HISTORY?

Some of the road’s best-loved stories are legends or rest on a single source: Leizu and the cocoon in her tea, the princess who hid silkworm eggs in her headdress, the monks who smuggled eggs to Justinian in a hollow cane, and the story that papermaking spread west from prisoners taken at Talas. The episode marks these clearly apart from what the documents and archaeology show.

Artistic impressions of the Registan in Samarkand and of Issyk-Kul at dawn, made for the episode. They are not historical records.

A BEDTIME QUESTION

If you could rest for one night on the road, would it be at Turfan, at Kashgar or beside Issyk-Kul?

"Let the road fade now, the camels slow, the lamp grow low. You have nowhere to be, and nothing left to carry."
